Father Paul's Reflections on the Readings

The Ascension of the Lord

The first reading that links the birth of the Church to the moment Jesus is taken up to heaven, reminding us that the Church itself is the new presence of Jesus in our midst. The disciples are ordered not to leave Jerusalem but to wait for the promise of the Father. The apostles wanted to know God's plan and hope that they will have some say in how God's plan will work out. For us, one of the most difficult things is to wait for God to act. If we look at our own experiences, we are forever making plans for ourselves and for how God should act in our lives. We sometimes even set deadlines for when God should act in our lives. Our plans usually rotate around: me and myself, while God has still more wonderful plans, which will unfold if we wait on him. In the Gospel we have Jesus bidding farewell to his disciples. The Spirit comes to give them the gift of understanding. But in order to understand they have to stay until they are filled, renewed, recreated by the Spirit. We may have wonderful ideas and plenty of experience and feel that we can manage with what we have. But if we are ready to wait, if we are ready to surrender to the Spirit, something still more wonderful will happen in our life.
